DO MARTIANS HAVE THE

Man's imagination has long been entranced by ideas of what Mars might be like. Are there people there? If so, are they like us?

It is possible that a super-civilization exists on Mars...

By BILL KREH

For many years, scientists and astronomers have considered the possibility that life exists on the planet Mars. Now, it appears that if there is a civilization in existence there, it is as advanced as ours here on earth, or perhaps su-

The reason for this belief is the statement made recently by a leading Japunese astronomer that he had observed a brilliant explosive flash of several minutes' duratiou, followed by a luminous cloud, on Mars, The obvious answer: It was an atomic explosion!

The blast on this far-away plantwas seen by Tunico Saheki, a respected Japanese astronomer who anice 1933. The explosion was observed on one of Mars' close approaches to earth. Other astronomexample, Walter II. Haas, Director of the Society of Lunar and Planerary Observers, of Las Cruecastrange blue clouds on the normally red-appearing planet. Other observers also have seen colorful servers also have seen colorful servers also have seen colorful

The Japanese astronomer could ofter no satisfactory theory concerning the phenomenon he had observed. Several explanations were served, and the phenomenous conreputation of the phenomenous conternative servers and an answer, but no water exists on Marsau to field, but ice does not form on the planet's equator, where the blast was seen. A giant meteor could have bit the planet, but such mentarity. The only asswer left er this distance, it would require

Meteors, such as the one shown above, crash into the earth periodically. Perhaps Mars is capable of sending missiles to earth also.

DO MARTIANS HAVE THE ATOM BOMB?

Huge explosion was seen on Mars by Tsunco Saheki. Atom or jet blasts (as at left) might be the answer.

a huge, super-rocket of the guided-missile type.

The entire flight of such a rocket would have to The made against terrific forces of gravity, not only in escaping from the earth, but against the pull of the sun. This means that the rocket would need a fuel load that no rocket, as now developed, could carry unless atomic energy was need as a propellant.

If the rocket traveled at a speed of 10 miles per second, such a trip to Mars would take about two mouths. During this entire flight, the rocket would be exposed to destructive elements out in space-cosmic rays, solar radiation and meteorites. The chances of a large meteorite hitting the rocket are remote, but there would be billions of tiny particles, much smaller than the head of a pin, striking the rocket's surface at a speed of nearly 27 miles per second. Unless it was made of some yet unknown material, this constant blasting by these tiny particles would wear the rocket to dust in only a few days. In addition to this, the powerful cosmic rays coming from outer space are so intense, scientists say, that they would start a chain reaction that would explode the bomb and destroy the rocket. The rocket would be safe from these rave so long as it was protected by the thick atmosphere surrounding the earth, but once it got into space, the explosion would eventually ocenr. Also, the heat of solar radiation would theoretically fire the explosive instantly.

If the explosion that Mr. Saheki observed had its origin entirely on Mars, it would involve two possibilities. First, it could have been a natural event, like a volcanic eruption, or second, it could have been an atom bomb set off by inhabitants of the planet, SCIENTISTS say that it is reasonably possible the blast was caused by a sudden release of radioactivity in the planet's rocky shell, Geologists and scientists say that there are many craters here on the earth that may have been formed in this way. These explosions are like volcanic blasts, except that they are not accompanied by outpourings of melted rock. Many of the earth's so-called meteor cruters, and those on the moon, could have been formed in this way.

The other possibility—that intelligent people made and exploded an atomic bomb—is improbable, but definitely not impossible. Seeinglist start that the ravivousment of Mars makes it possible for life to exist there, atthough the air is very thin and temperature composed chiefly of carbon diazide. Very little oxygen is present. Because of this lack of oxygen, the Martian atmosphere caused shat out the ultraviolet rays from the sum, which are deadly to human beings. Mars also lacks water, the polar ice caps apparently coiled.

Despite all these handicups, it is entirely possible that a race of people has been developed that is able to survive under these conditions. What these people, if they do exist, hook like, or how they live, is something that not even the country's top scientists can answer.

The blast observed by Mr. Salieki has scientists backled. It has posed many questions that cannot be answered at this time. Has the United States developed a top-secret weapon that can launch atom bombs at other worlds? Or, have the Russians set up such a weapon somewhere behind the iron curtain?

Maybe it was the Martians who set off the blast and, if so, does it have anything to do with the "flying saucers," which now are being seen in greater abundance than ever before?

abundance than ever before?

No one can answer these questions. The cause of the mysterious explosion can only be guessed at, Only time will reveal the true answer.

GENTLEMEN REALLY PREFER BRUNETTES!

IT'S A FACT that gentlemen do prefer brunettes.

The ratio of winning brunettes over bloudes in beauty centests, is actually shocking. And men marry brunnettes more often, too. If there are dis-hards who refuse to believe this little known (and completely useless) information, Helene Edwards and Marlene Caspari are offered as mute proof. When they're around, brunettes ore preferred!

DRESSED only in rings, wrist wetches, sneekers and an occasionel shirt to guard against sunburn, the Sunbathing Association of America recently convened for a week at Mays Landing in New Jersey.

Their annual convention, except for the particularly unusual costuming, was conducted in much the same wey as any other convention throughout the land. On the first day there were friendly greetings, handshakes end backslaps as the three hundred delegates streamed into Mays Landing, But there was an undercurrent of strained relations for the party was about to split. Uncle "Danny" Boone was soon to be thrown down from his high position as Executive Secretary of the association. A Baptist Minister, Boone had been, and is still called by many, the "Grand Old Man of Nudism." However, as the delegates started the actual business of the convention, electing men to office, it become apparent that many voters were definitely in the mood for a change. When that change finally came, it was in the form of e landslide vote. Not only did Boone lose his job, but his candidate, Alois S. Knepp was also soundly defeated. The vote was fourteen hundred and fifty-seven to four hundred and thirty, most votes being proxy ballots. The winner in this upset was Mervin Mounce, a husky Oregon construction man

There was no hint as to why Uncle "Danny" Boone had become an ex-president. The reasons were very zealously guarded from all members of the press.

THE lighter side of the convention followed. In a wave of enthusiasm, a young lady named Myra Packwood was named 'Queen of All Nodims in America." Then, their affairs regulated for a year, the nuddits spent some time soaking up the health-giving rays of the sun and discussing the elections. During an average evening, they played cards, listened to radios and swapped stories to their heart's content.

The most interesting statement made at the convention, when all was said and done, were a few words spoken by Boone. He claimed that in the light of what has happened during the last few years, nudism may be a national vogue by the year nineteen hundred and sevent-two.

Such a possibility does, perhaps, exist, when one considers the evolution of the bathing suit. In the early days of the entury, boys and girls both were covered in great swaths of beach clothing. Later, both sexes bared their arms and legs. And finally, in swift alterations, the ladies changed from a fairly bulky one-piece suit to the tunnary exposing two-piece outflut which has now shrunk to the fikini.

If Boone's prophetic words turn out to be true, the nudists who gathered at Mays Landing will be remembered, not as rather unusual characters, but as pioneers of a trend that one day sweet America.

THE ONLY THING THE NUDISTS REFUSE TO REVEAL IS WHY DAN BOOME DIDN'T STAY PRESIDENT
